PALESTINE: FOR LAND AND LIFE

LIFE IN THE RUBBLE

HOME DEMOLITIONS IN THE WEST BANK
Beit Arabiya – House of Peace – located on a steep and rocky hillside that runs down to a ravine at the bottom of a narrow canyon, is named in honor of Arabiya Shawamreh, whose home has been demolished seven times by the Israeli authorities. In the early 1990s, Arabiya and her husband Salim purchased a small plot of land in the village of Anata, northeast of Jerusalem, close to the Shuafat refugee camp where Salim grew up. Over the course of four years, they applied three times for a building permit with the Israeli Civil Administration, but were denied each time. Each application cost them $5,000. Their land is in Area C – the portion of the West Bank that is under the full control of Israel.

Construction in Area C – which constitutes over 60 percent of the West Bank and is under Israeli administrative and security control – requires a permit from the Israeli Civil Administration (ICA). Even basic residential and livelihood structures, including a tent or a fence, require a building permit.

In 70 percent of Area C, Palestinian construction is prohibited; in 29 percent of Area C, it is heavily restricted – making it impossible for the Palestinians to obtain building permits. Only one percent of Area C is left for Palestinian development, most of which is already overcrowded. Between 2010 and 2014, only 33 of 2,020 applications submitted by Palestinians for building permits in Area C – 1.5 percent – were approved.

Any structure built or rehabilitated without a permit risks demolition. Between 1988 and 2014, the ICA issued 14,087 demolition orders against Palestinian-owned structures located in Area C (see map). Twenty percent of the demolition orders (2,802 orders) had been executed by the end of December 2014 while 11,134 demolition orders were left outstanding in January 2015, leaving affected households in a state of chronic uncertainty and threat.

In 2016, the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) recorded the highest demolition and displacement figures in the West Bank since it started recording in 2009. 1,089 Palestinian-owned structures throughout the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, were demolished because they lacked Israeli-issued building permits from the Israeli authorities, displacing 1,593 Palestinians and adversely impacting the livelihoods of another 7,101.
Though they were denied a permit, in 1994, Arabiya and her husband Salim decided to build a family home for their seven children at a cost of $20,000. They filed an appeal with the Israeli Supreme Court to obtain a building permit, but they were again denied — for the fourth time. In July 1998, a force of some 300 soldiers came unannounced and demolished their home, leaving the family traumatized and financially ruined.

“At least a third of all Palestinian homes in East Jerusalem lack Israeli-issued building permits, which are difficult to obtain, potentially placing over 90,000 residents at risk of displacement, which has a psychological impact.”
– Humanitarian Concerns, OCHA

With support from the Israeli Committee Against House Demolitions (ICAHD), the Shawamreh family decided to rebuild their home. The newly constructed home was demolished before the family could move in. With the help of neighbors and the ICAHD, the family rebuilt the home a third time. After their first night, the house was again demolished. In 2003, the Shawamreh home was rebuilt for the fifth time. Recognizing that they would never be allowed to live there, the family dedicated it as a peace center – Beit Arabiya – to challenge the occupation. The building has been demolished and rebuilt twice since then.

Today, facing Beit Arabiya on the opposite side of the canyon, is a fortress with watch towers — the principal interrogation and detention center of the Israeli security service. Arabiya and Salim’s home is a center for peace in the memories of Rachel Corrie and Nuha Sweidan, two women (an American and a Palestinian) who died resisting home demolitions in Gaza. The Shawamreh family now lives in an apartment in Kafur Akab, next to the Qalandiya refugee camp.

For decades, Israeli officials have violated the international law of occupation, prohibiting the destruction of property except for reasons of military necessity. Arabiya, Salim, and their children, who live with long-lasting psychological damage from the repeated demolitions of their home, are paying the price. After the first demolition, Arabiya was unable to speak for a month and remains fragile psychologically. Salim and Arabiya’s children still suffer, especially from nightmares and panic attacks.
“Any destruction by the Occupying Power of real or personal property belonging individually or collectively to private persons, or to the State, or to other public authorities, or to social or cooperative organizations, is prohibited, except where such destruction is rendered absolutely necessary by military operations.”

–Article 53, Fourth Geneva Convention, 1949

“Of all the terrible things I have seen in my 17 years with Rabbis for Human Rights (RHR), nothing quite matched the sight of a child coming home from school to discover that his/her home has been demolished. S/he had a home when s/he went off in the morning, and now there is rubble. I have seen all too many times how more than just the physical home is demolished. Families are demolished. I will never forget the fearful families literally sitting on suitcases, and looking out the window every morning. Maybe this is the day that their home will be surrounded by soldiers and the bulldozer is approaching. I will never forget the six-year-old child asking his parents, ‘If they come to demolish our home again, do you think we could save my bicycle?’”

–Rabbi Arik Ascherman, Rabbis for Human Rights
The views and conclusions expressed in this publication are those of the Oakland Institute alone and do not reflect opinions of the individuals and organizations that have sponsored and supported the work.

The Oakland Institute is an independent policy think tank bringing fresh ideas and bold action to the most pressing social, economic, and environmental issues.

Copyright © 2017 by The Oakland Institute

This text may be used free of charge for the purposes of advocacy, campaigning, education, and research, provided that the source is acknowledged in full. The copyright holder requests that all such uses be registered with them for impact assessment purposes. For copying in any other circumstances, reuse in other publications, or translation or adaptation, permission must be secured.

Cover photo: Demolition and construction in East Jerusalem. According to OCHA, 2016 was a record year for home demolitions in East Jerusalem © The Oakland Institute

FOR MORE INFORMATION
The Oakland Institute   |   PO Box 18978  |  Oakland, CA 94619 USA
www.oaklandinstitute.org  |  info@oaklandinstitute.org

ENDNOTES
1 Direct communication with Salim and Arabiya Shawamreh. March 5, 2014.
2 Under the Oslo accords, the West Bank was divided into three administrative areas, A, B, and C. The newly created Palestinian Authority was to control Area A; have civilian control of Area B with Israel in control of security; and Israel in full control of Area C, including security matters and all land-related civil matters.
4 Ibid.
8 Ibid.
12 Ibid.